Columbia is home to a community of scholars, students, and staff from many different religious backgrounds. The Office of the University Chaplain ministers to their individual faiths and supports individual spirituality while promoting interreligious understanding. The University Chaplain oversees the work of Community Impact, a nonprofit organization that utilizes more than 950 Columbia University student volunteers to provide food, clothing, shelter, education, and job training to more than 16,000 local community residents annually. The Office of the University Chaplain oversees the work of more than twenty recognized Religious Life Advisers representing specific faith traditions. The University Chaplain helps foster learning through spiritual, ethical, religious, political, and cultural exchanges, and hosts programs concerning justice, faith, interfaith understanding, and spirituality. The Office of the University Chaplain administers the Kraft Family Fund for Interfaith and Intercultural Awareness.

The staff of the Office of the University Chaplain is available for confidential pastoral counseling to individuals, couples, and families in the Columbia University community as well as for referrals to recognized Religious Life Advisers from a wide range of faith traditions. The Office of the University Chaplain may also assist with private ceremonies such as weddings, christenings, and memorial services. We warmly welcome your interest, questions, and participation; please contact chaplain@columbia.edu.
